Promoting the health of staff working in General Practice

Ensuring that the health and safety of staff is protected and promoted is essential to the effective management of every organisation.

"Health at Work in the NHS" is an England-wide strategy which aims to encourage and support NHS organisations who are taking steps to promote the health of their staff. The overall vision of the strategy is that health in the workplace is affected by many different aspects of working life. Occupational health & safety management, personnel management and broader organisational issues all contribute to the individual staff members' experience of work. "Health at work in the NHS" produces and disseminates information on a wide range of workplace topics, as well as guidance on how to link them together into a comprehensive workplace health programme. The project provides:-

- Written manuals and directories
- Seminars and training events
- Small grants for regional awareness-raising events
- A newsletter

The project also carries out research into workplace health. All written materials and events are currently free of charge.

The strategy was launched in 1992, and for the first 5 years the focus has been on hospitals and community trusts. As from January 1998 this expands to include General Practice. The following written materials, produced specifically for General Practice, will be available soon:-

- Health at Work in Primary Care – An introductory pack (available February)
- Survey of General Practices – A Health at Work Research Study (available March)
- Health & Safety in General Practice – A Practical Guide to Risk Assessment (available April)

Practices wishing to receive further information should contact:-

Vivienne Rangecroft, Health at Work in the NHS, Trevelyan House, 30 Great Peter St. London SW1P 2HW. Tel: 0171 415 1873

"Health at Work in the NHS" is managed by the Health Education Authority on behalf of the NHS Executive.

Please note: This project covers England only.
